INTRODUCTION:
Pupps is short form of pruritic urticarial papules & plaque of pregnancy. Also known by PUPPS. It is also known as polymorphic eruption of pregnancy or PEP. It’s a rash that starts OFF unobtrusive enough and begin as tiny, itchy red bumps in the stretch marks on the abdomen. Its distinguishing characteristic is that it surrounds but never affect the navel, these red bumps gets bigger & forms large patches and spreads down the legs and up the chest, it is itchy and eczematous rash.

Incidence
PUPPS however is the most common specific skin condition during pregnancy, About one in every 130 to 1 in 300 pregnancies developed this rash. It more likely to occur in a first pregnancy, but can sometimes occur in subsequent ones.

Clinical Feature
1. Itchy red bumps.
2. Start on the abdomen, then spreads.
3. Red, Eczema like patches.
4. Severe itching.
5. Blisters

Causes
1) An organ system in overtaxed: Since liver the main detox organ of body, when it becomes overwhelmed with toxins, the symptoms are exhibited through the skin through rashes & discoloration .The kidneys are in charge of filtering the body’s blood, and us also through to play a potential role in PUPPS rash.

2) Abdominal stretching that causes skin inflammation: Carrying extra weight, have multiples or large babies puts extra stress on the skin and damages the connective tissue. It starts out a stretch marks but the damage can cause the skin to be inflamed and develops into PUPPS rash.

3) Fetal cells migration to the mother skin: During pregnancy fetal cells migrate to different parts of the mother body, including her. Heart and skin. This can be protective benefits from certain diseases that suggest foreign invaders, triggering a systemic response and causing a PUPPS rash. It is more likely occur if women having boy. In 60-70% of women with PUPPS, who were carrying boys, male DNA was detected in their PUPPS rash.

Prevention: Since no one is really sure what causes PUPPS exactly, there isn’t a guaranteed way to prevent it, you can however make some healthy choices that decrease of prevent of getting the condition. Also keep the moisturizing skin by applying moisturizers.
